KENTUCKY COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.

General Information.

KENTUCKY COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES was incorporated by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky in 1876, its object and purpose being declared to be to promote the education of young women in literature, science, and the arts. The language of the act of incorporation is as follows: "This Institution shall have full power to grant to students under its charge, and to others possessing unusual literary attainments, diplomas or honorary testimonials in such form as it may designate. It may also grant and confer such honors, degrees, and diplomas as are granted by any university, college, or seminary of learning in this State. Also, diplomas granted by this College shall entitle the possessor to the immunities and privileges allowed by usage or statute to the possessors of like diplomas from any university, college, or seminary of learning in the State."

LOCATION.

Pewee Valley possesses unsurpassed advantages as a location for an institution of learning. It is situated on the Short Line Railroad, sixteen miles east of Louisville, at an elevation of four hundred and fifty feet above the level of the city. The town itself is a well known health resort, and is surrounded by a country noted for its beauty and for the culture and refinement of its people. Elegant residences, highly cultured society, and Christian churches all combine to make it attractive as an educational center.

BUILDINGS.

The buildings afford a pleasant and comfortable home. The rooms are well ventilated and tastefully furnished. Two usually occupy the same sleeping apartment. The chapel, dining-room, and recitation-rooms are peculiarly well adapted to their various uses. They are in the midst of ample grounds, beautified by shade trees and shrubbery, walks and drives.

LIBRARIES.

The young ladies have access to two libraries, and find the carefully selected books an invaluable aid in the collateral reading so necessary in their college course.

DISCIPLINE.

The young ladies are subjected to the restraint of a firm, but gentle and parental discipline. A few necessary rules, strictly enforced and promptly and cheerfully obeyed, secure order, promote intellectual progress, and tend to the upbuilding of sound and symmetrical character. The ideal at which we aim, is to throw around those entrusted to our care, an environment which shall most effectually restrain and repress what is bad, and stimulate and quicken what is best in our common nature.

General Remarks.

The management feel justified in expressing the hope that KENTUCKY COLLEGE is about to enter upon a new career of success and usefulness.

The accessibility of the place, its proximity to the city of Louisville, the culture and refinement of its people, make it a desirable location for a female school.

The teachers have been selected with great care, and with reference to their merits as instructors of the young.

They are skillful and thorough, experienced in their special departments, familiar with the latest and best methods of instruction, hence are abundantly capable of meeting the demands of any school or community.

The course of study is broad and thorough. The development of mind and character is the object to be attained.

Mere instruction is not education. The knowledge acquired in the process of education is an incident; the end to be attained is soul growth. It is the evolution of power by the exercise of power. It is a force which acts within, outward. The chief office of the instructor is to quicken and stimulate this vital force, and to place within its reach the materials required in the silent work of growth.

As surely as physical strength is related to food and exercise, just so surely does mental vigor depend upon those influences which stir the vital forces to activity.

It will be our purpose, not only to impart knowledge, but to guide those powers of the mind which knowledge shall nourish and stimulate, to marshal these powers, not for a single field, but for a life's campaign.
